Data Feminism in Action

A public budget is never neutral. It is an expression of power, priorities, and values.

How to rethink public budgets for a real Gender Equality?

Equal access does not mean equal opportunity.

We have to move beyond formal reporting.

Gender-Responsive Budgeting (GRB) has to be seen as a political tool rooted in Intersectional Data Feminism.

GENDER-RESPONSIVE BUDGETING	DATA FEMINIST GENDER- RESPONSIVE BUDGETING
Ex-post annex: a compliance checkbox.	Strategic driver: reshapes priorities before spending.
Binary lens: treats population as " Men vs. Women ".	Intersectional lens: accounts for age, class, and background.
Data as facts: assumes figures are objective.	Data as power: interrogates who makes financial decisions.

Top-down strategy meets bottom-up action

TOP DOWN (e.g. institutional capacity)

- In-house Action-Research Labs inside Public Administrations
 - Training civil servants for long-term sustainability

BOTTOM-UP (e.g. civic empowerment)

- Data Literacy for feminist movements & CSOs
- Transforming complex accounts into Civic Audits

Moving beyond surface metrics

Our Mission:

To take Gender-Responsive Budgeting out of academic silos and quiet municipal offices.

The Vision:

Building communities that are not just transparent on paper, but equitable and fair in reality.

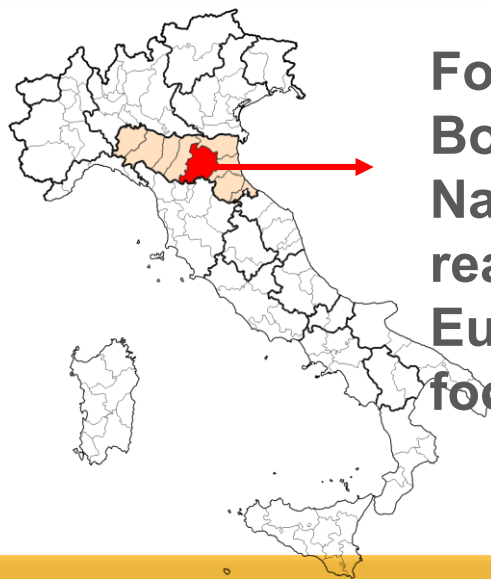

Rooting theory in practice: A collaborative ecosystem

- Action-Research as a bridge: moving Gender-Responsive Budgeting (GRB) theory out of academic silos and integrating it directly into Public Administration (PA) practices.
- Empowerment through literacy: building capacity for both decision-makers and civil servants through targeted training and civic data literacy.
- Comprehensive partnerships: paving the way for robust University-CSO-PA collaboration models to ensure long-term sustainability and structural gender equality.
